

Heidelberg University of Education International Teaching Fellowship January 2024 – December 2025

As one measure of its internationalization agenda Heidelberg University of Education offers international teaching fellowships.

What are the implications of a teaching fellowship?

Teaching fellows spend up to six weeks at Heidelberg University of Education between October and February (winter term) and between April and July (summer term). During this period they give two public lectures and teach one course (28 lesson hours at 45 minutes) open to our undergraduate and MA students. Courses should be taught in English or German. Courses taught in English are very welcome.

What kind of support does Heidelberg University of Education offer its teaching fellows?

The University covers travel expenses to and from Heidelberg up to 1600 € (economy class airfare) as well as accommodation in Heidelberg (apartment hotel with en-suite bathroom and kitchenette) a Campus Card (for use of cafeteria and library systems) and a Honorar equivalent to the payment of a course.

Who is eligible for a teaching fellowship?

Eligible are full, associate and assistant professors from universities abroad. As Heidelberg University of Education does not pay a salary to the teaching fellows they should be tenured faculty on a sabbatical or on vacation. An established academic co-operation to a professor at Heidelberg University of Education is expected from the applicant.

What are the necessary documents for the application to become an international teaching fellow?

- Letter of motivation
- CV, including list of publications and research grants
- List of university courses taught in the past two years
- Course outline for course to be taught at Heidelberg University of Education and topics of planned public lectures
- If possible: evidence on course evaluations
